

Abstract

The present invention relates to methods and compositions for the efficient identification of one or more functionalities of a product encoded by a nucleic acid sequence of interest. The methods utilize the abilities to over and/or under express the product in a cell, as well as the combination of these results, to permit the identification of at least one of the product's cellular or in vivo functionality.